BEHAVIORAL ANALYST

Focused on teaching others how to collect data to create a therapeutic environment, behavior analysts write reports and implement plans to improve support programs. They teach support professionals, parents, and teachers different ways to implement behavior support plans, procedures, and skills.
Returning home following brain injury – regardless of severity – can be complex. It is often emotional, exciting, overwhelming, and exhausting for both the individual and their family. Most individuals are very happy to come home after rehabilitation; not only is home a safe and secure place but also is often perceived as a place where one will find one’s old self. Friends and family are happy, as well, but after a period of welcoming they may return to their old routines of school, work, and leisure activities.
